THE DEATH OF H. M. WHITNEY.

The funeral of H M Whitney, Sr., whose death occurred suddenly at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, will take place from the late residence at 3:30 this afternoon. Rev H H Parker will officiate.

Henry M Whitney was the son of the Rev Samuel Whitney, a teacher and mechanic of New Haven, Conn, who was a member of the pioneer company of missionaries that arrived in Honolulu on the brig Thaddeus in 1820. The Rev Samuel Whitney died at Lahaina, Dec 15, 1845. His mother, Mercy Partridge Whitney, who lived for fifty-two years in Hawaii, died at Waimea, Kauai, Dec 26, 1872. Mr Whitney was one of four children. His sister Maria Pogue, the first white girl born in the Hawaiian Islands, died at the age of seventy-nine at Santa Clara, Cal, April 20, 1904. He left one surviving brother, Samuel Whitney, who lives in Connecticut.

Mr Whitney was born at Waimea, Kauai, on June 5, 1824, four years after the arrival of his parents in these islands. He left Hawaii when a very young lad to secure an education in the States. Going to the home of relatives in New England he secured an education and at an early age learned the printing trade.

He was the young foreman in the printing house of Harper & Bros, in New York, when his thoughts first again turned to his birthplace in Hawaii. He served the Harper's two years and the publication office of the Bible Society two years. Then the opportunity arrived to return here. He journeyed to San Francisco by way of the Isthmus of Panama and at San Francisco met Dr Judd who was then traveling abroad with the two young princes who later became the kings Kamehameha IV and Kamehameha V. Dr Judd wanted a practical man to take charge of the Polynesian, the government paper. He told Whitney that they had had several editors who had thrown up their jobs and cleared out to California, joining the rush to the newly found goldfields. The young man agreed to take hold and came to Honolulu. The work on the Polynesian was not uncongential to Whitney, but like most Americans then resident in the islands, he was irritated by the government's policy. The whitemen desired an American paper and the white residents wanted one which was not run "by authority." Whitney gave such a paper to them, calling it the Pacific Commercial Advertiser. He got from New York a Washington hand press (still in the Gazette office) which had a capacity of only 600 papers an hour, and this had to be propelled by hand power. The first number of the paper was a little four-page, five-column sheet. It was a weekly. Among Mr Whitney's first employees were the late James Auld, the late Alexander Bolster and Henry Smith the present clerk of the judiciary, who learned the printing trade and was a compositor for Whitney. The paper had not been established two months before the young publisher had fought and won out of court, his first libel suit, in which R C Wylie, Minister of the Interior, was the complainant.

Mr Whitney sold the Advertiser in 1870 to Black & Auld, but took charge of it again in 1878 and did not finally give up his connection with it until 1896. In 1885 he took the editorship of the Planters Monthly and conducted that journal until April of last year.

He imported the first power press to Hawaii, an Adams, bringing it across the Isthmus.

The old time vignette of Honolulu, printed on the title page of the Advertiser, was from a sketch made in 1849 by Mr Whitney. He sketched this while clinging to the masthead of a ship.
